Valentine's Day Pet Dangers

By AskSusanPeters

Valentine's Day can be very dangerous to your pet. You need to take extra steps to be sure your dog or cat is safe.

Dangers include

- Roses
- Lilies
- Chocolates
- Candy
- Gift Wrap

Candy Wrappers

Roses have thorns with could get caught in a paw or swallowed. Keep roses out of reach of your pet. Keep plenty of fresh water available to your dog or cat so the water the roses are kept in won't tempt him.

Lilies can be poisonous to your pet. Some lilies have a toxic chemical and can cause harm.

Chocolates can be very tempting to your pet but should be considered poisonous.

Candy may have chocolate in them and if eaten by your pet could be poisonous to him.

Gift-wrap may smell of sweets, candy, and chocolate. The sweet smell might be inviting to your pet and cause him to eat the gift-wrap. Ribbon, etc. may be ingested and cause big trouble for your dog or cat.

Candy Wrappers are another danger. The wrappers have the scent of sweet chocolate and smell like a treat to your dog or cat. Many wrappers have sharp edges (such as foil) and may have some chocolate left on the wrapper.

Keep your candy, chocolate, and flowers out of reach of your dog or cat. Should your pet show signs of poisoning call the Poison Control Hot Line. Poison Control 1-800-222-1222

Sir Robbie of Skye, UD, ASCA-UD, CGC

April 9, 1995—January 21, 2008

Chrissy & Ron Weatherston
Windsor Shelties

It is with a heavy heart that I write, about the passing of our beloved sheltie Robbie U-CDX CR Sir Robbie of Skye, UD, ASCA-UD 4/10 UDX legs, CGC on January 21, 2008. Robbie was born at home at 2:00 am on April 9, 1995 and Robbie never left, unless he went to training or a show. Robbie was my Novice A dog and it still amazes me that he got his CD, we have a video of Robbie's first show he had to go check out the judge, check out the baby gates and he still scored a 173.

Robbie was retired from showing back in 2000 due to medical reasons and spent the remain years playing ball in the backyard with anyone that would play with him. Robbie ended up with a UD from AKC and from ASCA also got 4 legs of his UDX title before retiring.

He was the reason I got into Obedience, if you saw Robbie in the ring he had one speed only Robbie speed he was the most reliable dog to take in the ring you know exactly what you were going to get in the ring. He was a great learning dog for me and I will never forget him.

I also have to take a minute and thank Caren and Ernie Ciampini, without them I would never of had Robbie. Robbie's sire was "Michael" Angels Michelangelo Bambino and his mother was our "Misty" Weatherston's Mystic Dawn who we lost August 2006, thanks to them I got into this crazy world of dog showing and I have never looked back. Thank you.

Campylobacter* Infection and Animals

What is Campylobacter infection (campylobacteriosis)?

Campylobacter* Infection and Animals

What is Campylobacter infection (campylobacteriosis)?

Important Tip!

Protect yourself against getting Campylobacter from animals. Simply wash your hands with running water and soap after any contact with animals and animal feces (stool).

Campylobacter jejuni

Campylobacteriosis is a bacterial disease caused by Campylobacter jejuni or Campylobacter coli. Campylobacter usually causes a mild to severe infection of the gastrointestinal system, including watery or bloody diarrhea, fever, abdominal cramps, nausea, and vomiting. A rare complication of Campylobacter infection is Guillain-Barre syndrome, a nervous system disease that occurs approximately 2 weeks after the initial illness develops.

Can animals transmit Campylobacter to me?

Sometimes, yes, animals can spread Campylobacter to humans. Most people get campylobacteriosis from contaminated food. However, animals can have Campylobacter in their feces (stool). If people touch contaminated feces, they can get sick. Animals that may carry Campylobacter in their feces include farm animals, cats, and dogs. Animals do not have to be ill to pass Campylobacter to humans. People with compromised immune systems, including those undergoing treatments for cancer, organ transplant patients, and people with HIV/AIDS, have a higher risk than others of getting Campylobacter infection from food and animals.

How do I reduce my risk of getting Campylobacter infection from animals?

- After contact with animals and animal feces, wash your hands thoroughly with running water and soap.
- If you are immunocompromised and are getting a new pet, avoid farm animals, cats, and dogs with diarrhea.
- If your dog or cat has diarrhea, talk to your veterinarian.
- If you develop symptoms, including diarrhea, vomiting, abdominal cramps, and/or nausea, contact your physician. Be sure to inform him or her of your pet and if it is ill.
- If you are immunocompromised, be extra cautious around farm animals and their environment.

How can I find out more about campylobacteriosis?

Please read CDC's general fact sheets on Campylobacter infections, including frequently asked questions and technical information.

Division of Bacterial and Mycotic Diseases

This is a follow on to the article last month

Campylobacter Infections

What is campylobacteriosis?

Campylobacteriosis is an infectious disease caused by bacteria of the genus Campylobacter. Most people who become ill with campylobacteriosis get diarrhea, cramping, abdominal pain, and fever within 2 to 5 days after exposure to the organism. The diarrhea may be bloody and can be accompanied by nausea and vomiting. The illness typically lasts 1 week. Some persons who are infected with Campylobacter don't have any symptoms at all. In persons with compromised immune systems, Campylobacter occasionally spreads to the bloodstream and causes a serious life-threatening infection.

How common is Campylobacter?

Campylobacter is one of the most common bacterial causes of diarrheal illness in the United States. Virtually all cases occur as isolated, sporadic events, not as a part of large outbreaks. Active surveillance through FoodNet indicates about 15 cases are diagnosed each year for each 100,000 persons in the population. Many more cases go undiagnosed or unreported, and campylobacteriosis is estimated to affect over 1 million persons every year, or 0.5% of the general population. Campylobacteriosis occurs much more frequently in the summer months than in the winter. The organism is isolated from infants and young adults more frequently than from other age groups and from males more frequently than females. Although Campylobacter doesn't commonly cause death, it has been estimated that approximately 100 persons with Campylobacter infections may die each year.

What sort of germ is Campylobacter?

The Campylobacter organism is actually a group of spiral-shaped bacteria that can cause disease in humans and animals. Most human illness is caused by one species, called Campylobacter jejuni, but 1% of human Campylobacter cases are caused by other species. Campylobacter jejuni grows best at the body temperature of a bird, and seems to be well adapted to birds, who carry it without becoming ill. The bacterium is fragile. It cannot tolerate drying and can be killed by oxygen. It grows only if there is less than the atmospheric amount of oxygen present. Freezing reduces the number of Campylobacter bacteria present on raw meat.

How is the infection diagnosed?

Many different kinds of infections can cause diarrhea and bloody diarrhea. Doctors can look for bacterial causes of diarrhea by asking a laboratory to culture a sample of stool from an ill person. Diagnosis of Campylobacter requires special laboratory culture procedures, which doctors may need to specifically request.

How can campylobacteriosis be treated?

Virtually all persons infected with Campylobacter will recover without any specific treatment. Patients should drink plenty of fluids as long as the diarrhea lasts. In more severe cases, antibiotics such as erythromycin or a fluoroquinolone can be used, and can shorten the duration of symptoms if they are given early in the illness. Your doctor will make the decision about whether antibiotics are necessary.

Are there long-term consequences?

Most people who get campylobacteriosis recover completely within 2 to 5 days, although sometimes recovery can take up to 10 days. Rarely, some long-term consequences can result from a Campylobacter infection. Some people may have arthritis following campylobacteriosis; others may develop a rare disease that affects the nerves of the body beginning several weeks after the diarrheal illness. This disease, called Guillain-Barré syndrome, occurs when a person's immune system is "triggered" to attack the body's own nerves, and can lead to paralysis that lasts several weeks and usually requires intensive care. It is estimated that approximately one in every 1000 reported campylobacteriosis cases leads to Guillain-Barré syndrome. As many as 40% of Guillain-Barré syndrome cases in this country may be triggered by campylobacteriosis.

How do people get infected with this germ?

Campylobacteriosis usually occurs in single, sporadic cases, but it can also occur in outbreaks, when a number of people become ill at one time. Most cases of campylobacteriosis are associated with handling raw poultry or eating raw or undercooked poultry meat. A very small number of Campylobacter organisms (fewer than 500) can cause illness in humans. Even one drop of juice from raw chicken meat can infect a person. One way to become infected is to cut poultry meat on a cutting board, and then use the unwashed cutting board or utensil to prepare vegetables or other raw or lightly cooked foods. The Campylobacter organisms from the raw meat can then spread to the other foods. The organism is not usually spread from person to person, but this can happen if the infected person is a small child or is producing a large volume of diarrhea. Larger outbreaks due to Campylobacter are not usually associated with raw poultry but are usually related to drinking unpasteurized milk or contaminated water. Animals can also be infected, and some people have acquired their infection from contact with the infected stool of an ill dog or cat.

How does food or water get contaminated with Campylobacter?

Many chicken flocks are silently infected with Campylobacter; that is, the chickens are infected with the organism but show no signs of illness. Campylobacter can be easily spread from bird to bird through a common water source or through contact with infected feces. When an infected bird is slaughtered, Campylobacter can be transferred from the intestines to the meat. More than half of the raw chicken in the United States market has Campylobacter on it. Campylobacter is also present in the giblets, especially the liver.

Unpasteurized milk can become contaminated if the cow has an infection with Campylobacter in her udder or the milk is contaminated with manure. Surface water and mountain streams can become contaminated from infected feces from cows or wild birds. This infection is common in the developing world, and travelers to foreign countries are also at risk for becoming infected with Campylobacter.

What can be done to prevent the infection?

There are some simple food handling practices for preventing Campylobacter infections. Physicians who diagnose campylobacteriosis and clinical laboratories that identify this organism should report their findings to the local health department. If many cases occur at the same time, it may mean that many people were exposed to a common contaminated food item or water source which might still be available to infect more people. When outbreaks occur, community education efforts can be directed at proper food handling techniques, especially thorough cooking of all poultry and other foods of animal origin, and common sense kitchen hygiene practices. Some data suggest that Campylobacter can spread through a chicken flock in their drinking water. Providing clean, chlorinated water sources for the chickens might prevent Campylobacter infections in poultry flocks and thereby decrease the amount of contaminated meat reaching the market place.

Some Tips for Preventing Campylobacteriosis

Cook all poultry products thoroughly. Make sure that the meat is cooked throughout (no longer pink), any juices run clear, and the inside is cooked to 170°F (77°C) for breast meat, and 180°F (82°C) for thigh meat.

If you are served undercooked poultry in a restaurant, send it back for further cooking.

Wash hands with soap before handling raw foods of animal origin. Wash hands with soap after handling raw foods of animal origin and before touching anything else.

Prevent cross-contamination in the kitchen:

Use separate cutting boards for foods of animal origin and other foods.

carefully clean all cutting boards, countertops and utensils with soap and hot water after preparing raw food of animal origin.

Avoid consuming unpasteurized milk and untreated surface water.

Make sure that persons with diarrhea, especially children, wash their hands carefully and frequently with soap to reduce the risk of spreading the infection.

Wash hands with soap after having contact with pet feces.

What are public health agencies doing to prevent or control campylobacteriosis?

To learn more about how Campylobacter causes disease and is spread, CDC began a national surveillance program in 1982. A more detailed active surveillance system was instituted in 1996; this will provide more information on how often this disease occurs and what the risk factors are for getting it. CDC is also making an effort to inform the public about campylobacteriosis and ways to avoid getting this disease. The U.S. Department of Agriculture conducts research on how to prevent the infection in chickens. The Food and Drug Administration has produced the Model Food Code, which could decrease the risk of contaminated chicken being served in commercial food establishments.

I Have A Question

What are your feelings about early spay or neuter.

I've not researched it enough to say which is better.
But for me, I think that any under 6 months is too soon.

Barbara
CharBar Shelties

Vets push it to make money. My daughter took her little male to a vet in California who told her there were all kinds of problems and ended up paying $1200 + for his neutering.

Our female had mastitis and the new vet immediately said bring her in to be spayed or she will have it again next time. In fact she had it with 2 litters but got on top of it immediately and had no further problems. It is a virus I know but it can be handled with good and quick care I believe.

This winter has been hard on our 6 year old and we will not have any more puppies with her. I do feel that spaying tends to make them overly heavy.
Helene Pockrus

I see nothing wrong with Early spay or neuter. And I would and do it with puppies that are going to be placed in companion homes. It really helps the mind if you get them spay or neutered before they are placed in companion homes, No worry in waiting for new owners to have their new companion spay or neutered when it has been done. OF course we all can't afford to have puppies spay and neuter before they leave your hands BUT if I could all the time I would J So yes to early spay or neuter.

Tammy Blakely

Personally I prefer to wait till the puppy is about 6 mos. old. However, early spay/neuter works for some people and if that's what they prefer, I don't see a problem with it.

Peggy

Early spay or neuters can come with risks. Those include the chance of nicking the nerves in that area. This can result in an at best scenario of a longer healing time following the procedure and worse case scenario a lifetime of problems such as incontinence in the affected puppy. The risk of problems associated is greater with smaller puppies and smaller breeds. Nonetheless, not being a vet, it would be pretty hard for me to calculate the risk associated with an early (to my understanding 8-10 weeks old) spay or neuter. Some vets will do this and feel comfortable with it while other vets will opt to wait until the puppy is more developed and older for safety. I personally would rather wait until the puppy is at least 4 months old to avoid the potential for the risks named.

Julene

I Have A Question

Some research has show that dogs and bitches spayed before they are a year old grew significantly taller, as the growth plates stay open longer. This should be a big consideration for breeders selling puppies to performance homes and requiring the animals be altered. My experience with Irish setters certainly showed this tendency in the last litter I bred. Two of the smaller bitches, when sold, were spayed early and grew to be much taller than the bitch I kept and didn't spay until she was 5 years old. Spaying, at least in Irish setters, also causes a dramatic change in their coats. They get an ugly, soft, lighter colored coat within a year after being spayed. If people were responsible pet owners the problems of pet over-population would be helped, and animals would not need to be altered.

Club Meetings

Our Club meeting for January 2008 will be held on Wednesday February 20, at 7:00 PM at Sandy Bicentennial Park, in the building in front the pavilion.

The Park is located at 8680 South 500 East.

The board will meet at the same location on the same night at 5:45PM

The educational program for February's meeting will be a discussion on the standard and virtues search.

Anyone that would like to bring a dog for us to find virtues is welcome to do so. Please let Tricia Harris (lacewoodshelties@comcast.net) know that you will be bringing a dog. We are looking for dogs of all types whether they are conformation dogs or not. We will just be looking for virtues in each dog. We will ignore faults. Thank you

Congratulations are in order

We congratulate Shanna Wilkinson and "Holly", a very special team who together have shown us a real and unique example of what a sheltie's special value is as a service dog.

Recently we were able to see them at the AKC Championship shows at the Eukanuba Classic in Long Beach, CA receiving the ACE award title as a service dog. What a wonderful pair of sheltie ambassadors! They represented Utah well and made us proud.

Congratulations!!!
